The spirit of conciliation and the far-seeing statesiaanship which guided the frimers of the Constitution in their work, are well worthy of consideration at the present time, and that our readers may see their animating impulses, we avail ourselves of Towles' Analysis of the debates and nets of the convention, which draws largely from the Malison papers and the diary of Judgo Lansing, of New York. Seven years before the meeting of the Constitutional Convention, that is in 1777, the articles of confederation and Perpetual Union between the original thirteen had declared:

And the articles of this confederation shall be inviolably observed by every State, and the Union shall be perpetual; nor shall any alteration at any time hereafter be made in any of them, inless such alteration he agreed to in a Congress of the United States, and be afterwards confirmed by the Logislutra of every State.
